Grant Wins Rodeo Rookie Of The Year

By Blake Spires
Asst. Editor

The sweltering heat of summer is in full swing, and to many youngsters across the country, that means Little League Baseball season is going strong after an offseason of cold weather and other sports. While those other sports are often football or basketball, one Adair County kid has been recognized for strapping in to an unconventional event.

Twelve-year-old Jonathan Grant, the son of Lacy and Jill Grant, recently received prestigious Rookie of the Year honors at the state finals in Sturgis, Ky. following his initial season with the Kentucky Junior Rodeo Association.

"When we travel that far, we usually leave after he rides," Jill Grant said of the family's typical routine for rodeos like Sturgis, which is a nearly four-hour trip. "At the state finals we asked Jonathan if he was ready to leave after he rode, but they stopped us and said 'No, no—you can't leave. You have to stay, he's getting an award.'"

The KJRA is for riders in kindergarten through eighth grade, and 54 young riders competed this year. In Jonathan's division, he finished third overall in addition to taking home the Rookie of the Year award.

Although this was his first year with the KJRA, it was Jonathan's fourth year of riding—a love he developed after watching his cousin, Cory Stone, ride.

"When Cory turned 18 and was allowed to start riding, Jonathan was over there all the time watching him and practicing with him," his mother said. "We didn't even know there was anywhere around here where he could compete in this kind of thing at

Fiscal Court Passes 2014-15 Budget

By Wes Feese
Editor

The Adair County Fiscal Court and Judge-Executive Ann Melton met for their June meeting Tuesday evening at the Adair County Courthouse Annex and passed a $5.9 million budget for the 2014-15 fiscal year.

The first reading for the budget was given at last month's meeting, and since no changes or amendments were suggested, the Court voted unanimously to go along with the proposed plan.

"You guys didn't ask for any changes and no changes have been made," Melton told the magistrates before the vote.

Melton commented further on the new budget following the meeting.

"It's real similar to last year's budget, except we've started paying on the hospital now," Melton said, referring to the $170,900 scheduled payment for Westlake Regional Hospital in the upcoming year. "Thanks to some hard work and cooperation from the magistrates though we've been able to pay off some debts so we will be able to handle that payment without any additional monies."

WWII Vet Honored For Service In Norway

By Blake Spires
Asst. Editor

Simpson Reliford has been an American hero for his service in World War II for seven decades. Last Friday, however, on the seventieth anniversary of the D-Day Normandy Invasion, the 88-year-old Columbia resident was officially recognized for his service to the country of Norway as well. Three officers from the NATO Allied Command Transformation honored Reliford at a ceremony held at the Red Barn Event Center.

"Today, we are going to honor Simpson Reliford for what he did for Norway," explained Norwegian Navy Captain Yngve

By Wes Feese
Editor

Giving was the theme of the weekend as Adair Countians showed their generosity by once again digging deep into their pockets and donating more than $36,000 to the 2014 WHAS Crusade for Children.

Many local churches submitted offerings from their congregations this weekend, volunteers from the Columbia-Adair County Fire Dept. manned roadblocks around town and took donations Friday and Saturday, and the Breeding and Knifley Area Volunteer Fire Depts. chipped in more than $1,000 each to top last year's collections by more than $3,000.

The success of the 2014 drive even surprised County Crusade Chairman Brandon Lewis, who says he wasn't expecting the totals to be as high this year.

"I'm glad to say that we exceeded my expectations with the amounts we drew in," Lewis says. "With the layoffs and the economy and everything, everyone's cutting back, so it was shocking to me."

Going into the weekend, the local fire departments had collected just over $12,000 through pancake breakfasts, the annual Sparky's Crusade Concert in honor of the late Charles Sparks, and a portion of the proceeds from the 2013

Editorial Commentary

Wes Feese, EDITOR

I was playing with my 13-month old nephew yesterday and—since he's my nephew—I was trying to teach him to throw a ball. He has the arm motion down pretty good but struggles to let go of the ball sometime, so we have plenty of work to do. That's not really what this column is about though. What I was really intrigued with about Eli was that he'd sometimes throw (or make the throwing motion anyway) with his right hand and sometimes with his left.

As a lefty myself, at first I said I hoped Eli turns out to be left-handed. I began to think though, is that really best? This might be something that most right-handed folks have never noticed, but the deck is stacked against lefties in a number of ways.

Sure, lefties are at an advantage sometimes, such as being a couple feet closer to first base as a hitter in baseball, and they tend to excel in creative fields (our Asst. Editor Blake Spires is left-handed, and so was former Progress Editor Paul B. Hayes), but we're more likely to suffer from dyslexia and have speech impediments. Our life expectancy is also somehow lower, which I don't understand but read enough articles asserting the fact that I'll reluctantly accept it as fact.

When I was in elementary school I used to write "b" and "d" backwards all the time, which might be because I'm left-handed but admittedly could've just been because I wasn't good with letters, but I digress. The worst part though was scissors. Every time we cut something out I was sure to have the most mangled mess of all my classmates, since the designers of plastic scissors had apparently never considered someone using their other hand to cut.

Later on in school, I was introduced to the right-handed desk. Most of my classmates had a nice comfortable elbow rest for their writing hand, but a few other weirdos and I had to contort our bodies to the point we essentially had to sit sideways at our desks just to write. There's even a teacher variation for this problem, and it's called a marker board (chalk board, if you went to school before the 1990s). I witnessed a few lefty teachers over the years struggle to write across the board because their hands drug right across what they just wrote and smudged everything to the point that it could no longer be read. After a while, they either gave up and let students write on the board for them, or began holding the marker like a paintbrush, which usually led to some comically bad handwriting on the board.

Notebooks weren't much better. The wire rings on the left side of most standard notebooks are a nightmare for lefties, who either have to turn the paper sideways and write from top to bottom, or try to tough it out and drag our hands across our writing, leading to smudges and a silvery, lead-covered pinky finger.

Computer mouses (mice?) are also made for righties. After years of struggling to develop enough dexterity to use a mouse effectively, I was introduced to a left-handed mouse in college. I couldn't use it. I was somehow worse using my left hand.

That's the other thing about being lefty: we usually develop some ambidextrousness out of necessity. I can eat with either hand, because I've bumped enough elbows at the dinner table that it's sometimes easier just to use my right hand than switch seats with someone or make sure I'm sitting at the end of the table. I've always used the television remote with my right hand, and didn't even know until I was researching this article that they're designed that way. The buttons are out of place for a lefty to use effectively. I also cut tobacco right-handed (even though I don't care if I ever cut another stick of tobacco the rest of my life) because otherwise we'd have had to drive an extra row of sticks and then I'd have to cut through in the opposite direction of everyone else.

So back to Eli. I guess it doesn't really matter if he's a lefty or righty. If he's a lefty, he'll learn to adapt, and probably end up with pretty good dexterity in both hands. If he's a righty, the world will be built for him and he will never have to know the left-handed struggle.

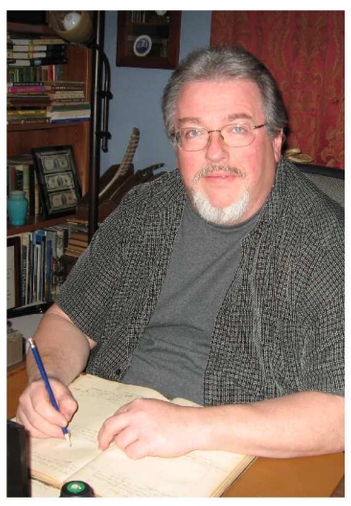

This column might seem silly to most readers. Most of you are right-handed though. I hope my fellow lefties, however, the hidden minority in plain sight, can relate to some of these issues.

Letter to the Editor

DISAPPOINTED CALLER

To the Editor:

Tuesday afternoon South Central Kentucky saw severe weather. There were many limbs, trees and power lines down due to the strong winds. I was driving along Dillon St. toward the bypass when I noticed a tree lying over on a power line. The power line crossed the street, so I thought this could definitely be a hazard to other drivers. Not knowing if this had already been reported, I dialed 911 to alert the authorities.

The 911 operator was very rude and told me, "Yeah. We know. You're the 75th person to call." He then hung up. I was very disappointed with the bad attitude I received. It won't discourage me from calling in the future, but I can see how it might seem discouraging to some. I understand the high call volume our emergency personnel must receive during times like Tuesday afternoon, but like any other business working with the public, customer service must still be a priority. A simple, "Thank you for calling," would have been nice.

Sincerely,
Kara Iqbal

Counties Selected For Post-Election Audit

Attorney General Jack Conway announced that six Kentucky counties were chosen in a random drawing this afternoon to undergo independent inquiries for any potential irregularities that may have occurred during the primary election on Tuesday, May 20. The counties are:

1.) Meade County
2.) Allen County
3.) Clark County
4.) Warren County
5.) Breathitt County
6.) Russell County

"These audits ensure a fair and equitable election process in Kentucky and supplement the work our investigators did leading up to and during the primary election," General Conway said.

The post-election audits, which are required by law (), will be conducted by the Office of the Attorney General. Pursuant to KRS 15.243 (3),(a), the Kentucky Attorney General is required to conduct a post-election audit investigation in no fewer than 5 percent of Kentucky's counties following each primary and general election. The counties are selected in a public drawing and must be done within 20 days of the election.

In each county, these routine inquiries will include checking election forms and interviewing county officials. The selection of these counties does not imply that irregularities are suspected.

The six counties selected during the last post-election audit in November of 2012 include: Bath, Bracken, Bourbon, Grayson, Johnson and Lewis counties. There were no irregularities discovered during the last audit.

In addition to the post-election audit, follow-up investigations are continuing regarding complaints to the Election Fraud Hotline, which received 205 calls from more than 60 counties between 6a.m. and 7p.m. during the primary election on May 20. There were 49 allegations of vote-buying. Those allegations came from Breathitt, Clay, Pike, Bell, Floyd, Harlan, Laurel, Owsley, Carter, Knott, Magoffin, Bath, Clinton, Knox, Lee, Morgan, Muhlenberg, Perry and Wayne counties. Specifics of the calls may not be discussed until our investigations are complete.

On primary election day, investigators with the Office of the Attorney General also monitored polling places in each of Kentucky's six congressional districts.

• Budget

The budget breakdown for the upcoming fiscal year includes $1.8 million in appropriations for the General Fund, with more than 77-percent of that money split almost evenly between general government and administration costs. Additionally, $2 million was set aside for the Road Fund, $1.3 million for the jail, $371,000 for the Adair 911 Center, $121,600 for the Green River Animal Shelter, and $41,650 for Parks and Recreation. The County also appropriated $240,100 in state Local Government Economic Assistance funds, and $2,250 for the Forrest Fire Fund.

In other business at Tuesday's meeting:

•The Court approved a rental contract for local businessman Matt Baker, owner of Columbia Control Systems, a commercial security company, to set up shop in the Historic Adair County Courthouse on the Public Square.

"We're needing space and I was told about the courthouse," Baker told Melton and the magistrates. "We're looking to move in and grow our business here in Adair County and hopefully create some jobs."

The agreement calls for Baker to pay $8 per month per square feet of space used, and the magistrates elected to sweeten the deal at the encouragement of Melton by waiving utilities costs for the first year—a move that hopes to encourage others to rent the building.

"We're hoping to get [Baker] some neighbors in there," Melton said. "We have some other folks that are looking."

•The Court also elected to award Baker's company a security systems contract to install 18 security cameras at three county buildings. The cameras will be linked to a server capable of handling feeds from up to 32 cameras, so additional cameras can be added in the future at only the cost of equipment and labor.

The total estimate was just more than $7,000 and comes with a three-year warranty. The only other estimate included a higher installation cost as well as a monthly service fee. The Court voted 6-1 in favor of the contract with Columbia Control Systems, with only magistrate Daryl Flatt voting nay.

"I'm not totally against it, but I just thought with the expense of it, I'd like to try something different," Flatt clarified Wednesday morning. "I know we've had a couple of break-ins—I'd be more in favor of an inventory list and keeping up with that for six months or so before we spend $7,000 though."

"Basically, the commission will create a level playing field for anyone here in Adair County," Bowe told the Court, adding that he'd like to see the commission up and running by September or October.

Magistrate Sammy Baker, who attended a preliminary meeting about the commission on behalf of the Fiscal Court, spoke highly of the prospect and moved to establish the commission, a motion that passed, 7-0.

County Attorney Jennifer Hutchison-Corbin will work with City Attorney Marshall Loy to develop an ordinance to make the commission official.

Wilson said that the population of Adair County inmates at the jail has ballooned from an average of 20 or so just a couple of years ago to more than 40 today, and the increase has led to fewer state inmates being able to serve time at the jail, causing Adair Regional to lose out on state money.

Wilson proposed cutting back the cost for home incarceration to the point where the jail will turn no profit from it, but said he hopes the measure will open up space in the jail for more state inmates, which could potentially bring in more money than home incarceration currently collects.

Sammy Baker moved to go along with Wilson's recommendation, and the Court voted 7-0 in favor of the motion.

•The Court approved the hire of two new part-time dispatchers at the 911 Center, in an effort to cut down on overtime pay for full-time dispatchers.

"Hopefully we can start cutting back on that overtime," 911 director Greg Thomas said.

Billy Bunch and Tiffany Smith-Keith were both unanimously approved and will start at $8 per hour.

Chamber Hears From Judge-Executive, Community Members

BY BLAKE SPIRES

June's regularly scheduled Columbia-Adair County Chamber of Commerce meeting took place Tuesday afternoon inside Lindsey Wilson College's Cranmer Dining Center, with the Chamber hearing from Ellen Zornes on behalf of the A.C.T.I.O.N Generation, County Judge-Executive Ann Melton, the Adair Community Garden Project and Ashley Miller, Director of Career Services at LWC.

Zornes addressed the Chamber first, providing members with a brochure about Adair Countians Together Influencing Our 'Now' Generation, or simply ACTION Generation—a group dedicated to helping the youth of Adair County be substance free.

"We're trying to make our community an even better place than it already is," Zornes said. "We've been working actively toward community health, and one of the biggest things involved with that is preventing substance abuse among our children."

Zornes said the focus is on increasing familial involvement and ensuring that parents talk to their children about drugs and alcohol.

"We as parents have this sense that our child is growing up and growing away from us, and that maybe they won't want to hear what we have to say, or that we won't want to know everything they're involved in," she said. "But everyone else is talking to your child about drugs. Shouldn't you be, too?"

Zornes outlined several projects in the community designed to help children and teens avoid drug and substance abuse. Perhaps the biggest of these was the recently-held Project Graduation, where more than $10,000 was given away to ACHS students in the annual drug-free night of fun and games following graduation.

From there, County Judge-Executive Ann Melton addressed the Chamber as part of the yearly tradition of hearing from local government.

"We always want to keep the community updated on what is going on and what we're planning," Melton said.

Melton listed her proudest accomplishments from her two terms as CJE, including the nearly-completed construction of a senior building, the building or repair of 20 bridges, the beautification and support of the Jim Blair Community Center and the upcoming Technical Satellite Campus at ACHS.

The Judge-Executive then turned toward a discussion of the county's finances, which she says have steadily improved during the past eight years. According to Melton, the unemployment rate in Adair County has improved on the national average by 1.7-percent since 2007, and the county's net assets have improved from $6 million in 2006 to $14 million at the last audit. The county's debt has also reportedly decreased from nearly $900,000 to approx. $130,000.

"I'm not totally responsible for these things," she added, thanking everyone from the county's magistrates to its Chief Financial Officer. "But I take a great deal of pride in what's been happening in my time here."

Even with improved financial standings, the future of Westlake Regional Hospital looms over the county.

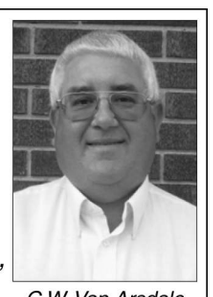

"I hope this entire [upcoming] election isn't about Westlake," Melton added, clearing up what she said were misconceptions about the Fiscal Court's role with the hospital and the establishment of the hospital tax. "The good news is that it's doing well now. I think it's on the right path."

After Melton spoke, Candice Armstrong, the Coordinator for Community Outreach and Engagement introduced a group of her students involved in the Adair Community Garden Project. The students then outlined the vision of the group, which centers on creating a local resource that provides fresh, chemical-free vegetables that are easily accessible to local residents, particularly those in low to moderate income families and the aging population. Members of the group also detailed its activities of the past few months and encouraged the Chamber to support the project.

To close, Director of Career Services Ashley Miller spoke to the Chamber, informing them of an available partnership between her department and local businesses. The partnership is geared toward providing LWC students with meaningful job experience, and offers reimbursements to businesses that employ eligible students.

"It's really a win-win for all of us," Miller explained. "We're trying to do what's best for both the students and the businesses."

Bull Run Charity Music Festival. Even with the substantial base heading into the weekend, Lewis says the final tallies are a testament to the generosity of the community's citizens.

"I just want to thank the good citizens of Columbia and Adair County for giving from the heart, just like they always do," Lewis says. "We were so pleased with how everything went and we're already planning for next year."

This year's live remote for WBKO was held in Campbellsville Sunday evening at the Charles Sparks Memorial Reflection Park at the Region 14 Fire Training Center. Each of the departments submitted their donations, which was broadcast on the station and emceed by local radio personality Tammy Sexton of 92.7 The Wave.

All donations from Adair County will be come back to the community to help local families and children, usually by way of grants through the school system. Adair County Schools Superintendent Alan Reed says that these funds are vital for smaller places like Adair County that don't have the strongest tax base.

"One of the things that I admire about this county, from the [19]70s all the way up to today, is how Adair County takes a leading role in the Crusade," Reed says. "We as a county have always been good to the Crusade, but they've been very good to us as well. We've always benefitted from the association with the Crusade, from the Charles Sparks Memorial Bus for special needs students, to supplemental staff, to all kinds of educational and instructional materials that we've been able to get through them."

Local firefighters began collecting for the WHAS Crusade for Children in 1963, and the money collected this year for the Crusade brings Adair County's total contributions to almost $1.1 million over the past 51 years.

"We're looking forward to doing it again," Lewis says. "It seems like no matter how hard times are, the people of Adair County manage to give more and more every year."

Lindsey Wilson presented with MSC President's Cup

Chris Wells named Co-Sports Information Director of the Year

Lindsey Wilson College athletics director Willis Pooler was presented with the Mid-South Conference President's Cup trophy on Wednesday at the conference's annual summer meeting on the Campbellsville University campus.

The Blue Raiders claimed the cup after scoring 111 out of a possible 120 points during the 2013-14 athletic year. The 111 points are tied for the third most in Mid-South history.

Lindsey Wilson sports information director Chris Wells was selected by his peers as the 2013-14 Co-Sports Information Director of the Year. It marks the seventh time he has earned the distinction (2003, 2007, 2009, 2010, 2011 and 2012).

Wells shares the award with Cumberland (Tenn.) University's Jo Jo Freeman.

Cumberlands (Ky.) finished second in the President's Cup standings with 105 points followed by Campbellsville (Ky.) with 98.5 points and Georgetown (Ky.) with 95 points.

Lindsey Wilson has won four overall President's Cup -- the Blue Raiders also captured the all-sports trophy in 2006-07, 2011-12 and 2012-13.

Head Coach Mark Fudge and the Adair County Indians Basketball team held a youth basketball camp at Lindsey Wilson College's Holloway Health and Wellness Center last week. The camp featured fifty campers and 20 staff, including the Indians basketball team.

Adair County offers area children opportunities to participate in a variety of camps this summer to stay healthy and active while not in school.

THE BREAKDOWN with Blake Spires

A few weeks back, I used this space to try and sell the non-soccer fan on the upcoming World Cup. It kicks off today with host country Brazil squaring off with Croatia, and while I'm incredibly excited, I realize an entire world full of storylines all in one tournament can be a little daunting, so here's a starter kit of what to watch for in World Cup 2014.

America: With apologies to what is surely a sizeable international contingent that reads my column every week, I'm going to start with the home team. The only soccer star that most of America can name (other than David Beckham), Landon Donovan, was left off the 23-man US roster, so the USMNT will be without its all-time leading goal scorer in Brazil.

That sets the stage for Captain Clint Dempsey, striker Jozy Altidore and midfielder Michael Bradley to become household names, while young guns like Julian Green figure to gain experience for future stardom. The US, however, is in the Group of Death, and overcoming Germany, Portugal, and Ghana, who has ended the US's last two World Cups, may be too tall a task in the group stage for the Boys in Blue.

Brazil, on and off the field: The most successful World Cup country in history, and five-time winners also have the honor of playing host to this installment of the Cup. But this isn't the Brazil of old. Talent is abundant, of course, and any of a host of Green and Gold jerseys can use the grand stage as their coming out party, but the Brazilian side will rely heavily on a man simply known as Neymar. If you're new to the sport, watch these guys, and focus heavily on number 10.

But that isn't the entire story. Brazil is in the midst of extreme turmoil and protests regarding the World Cup and its preparations. Billions of dollars that the country doesn't have were poured into hosting the Cup, and FIFA, soccer's governing body, pockets nearly all of the proceeds that the tournament draws. What the world refers to as "The Beautiful Game" could very well be marred by an ugly display of civil unrest.

Defending champion Spain: Spain is currently sitting on what appears to be the downside of its golden age of soccer. Aging stars Andres Iniesta and Xavi Hernandez led the country to a Euro 2008 title and a World Cup crown in 2010 in South Africa. They'll be looking to join Brazil and Italy as the only nations to go back-to-back, but must overcome a defense that has shown its share of lapses to do so. All told, Spain still figures to be a strong contender for a top four finish.

The Stars: Like all sports, soccer is made brilliant by the otherworldly talents of its biggest stars. Unlike sports like football, basketball and baseball, however, most Americans are generally unaware of the game's biggest names. With due respect to defenders and goalkeepers, the casual soccer fan will be drawn to the goal scorers.

Here are the best in the world to keep your eye on: Lionel Messi, Agentina; Cristiano Ronaldo, Portugal; Mario Balotelli, Italy; Neymar, Brazil; Luis Suarez, Uruguay; and my personal darkhorse, Romelu Lukaku, Belgium. There are others, of course, like Rooney and Dzeko, as well as several stellar Germans, but these six provide the most entertainment value to the casual fan.

The South American Sides: Before Spain captured the 2010 Cup in South Africa, no European country had won a World Cup outside of Europe. Additionally, no team from outside of South America has won a World Cup in any of the four tournaments hosted on the continent (or in the three held in North America, for that matter).

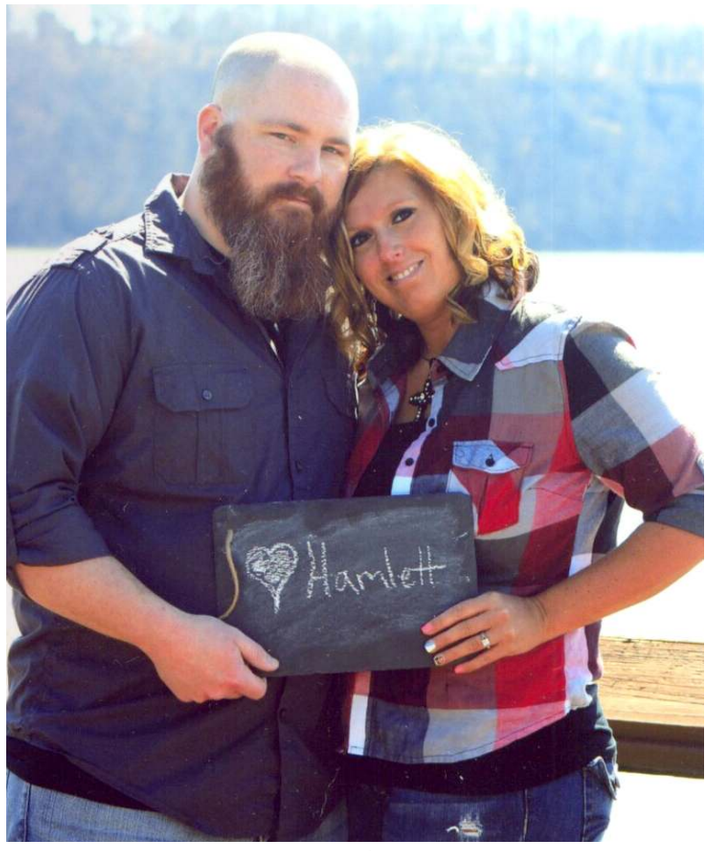

While that is far from a guarantee that a South American country will win this time around in Brazil, it does mean that watching the top sides from the continent is a wise choice if you're looking for a winner. Brazil, of course, is always a contender, and both Argentina, with their brilliant scorer Lionel Messi, and Uruguay figure to factor heavily into the tournament's outcome, but squads like Chile and Colombia can make a run to the knockout stage as well.

The winners: The most important aspect of any sport is who wins and loses. The peripheral action fills the void and gives analysts things to talk about, but ultimately, we care about the winners, and the World Cup is sport's grandest stage for victory. So who will take home the trophy? Here's my Final Four:

The host country, Brazil, will simply have too much flair and home turf advantage to falter early. Fellow South American power Argentina sits nicely to advance to the semis behind Messi, Angel di Maria, Aguero and Higuain to the point that they may not even need to field a goalkeeper. Defending champion Spain has a favorable road if they can win Group B and avoid the powers lurking elsewhere in the bracket, and Germany should march through the Group of Death and advance through an easy lower half of the bracket. Germany bests Brazil in the semis, then topples Spain in the final to hoist their fourth World Cup, and the second consecutive one by a European nation on foreign soil.

Keeping Dairy Cows Cool

June is Dairy Month, a time to celebrate the dairy industry. June also marks the beginning of summer so it's also a good time to start thinking about keeping cows cool this summer. Extension Dairy Specialist Dr. Donna Amaral-Phillips provides the following tips for helping the dairy herd beat the heat this summer!

Dairy cows will first start to experience heat stress when the temperature-humidity index (THI) exceeds 68. You may notice them breathing heavily and panting in the early stages. Cows are much less heat tolerant than humans. Lessening heat stress is extremely important to any dairy business, because heat stress decreases cow comfort and health, and most importantly decreases reproductive performance and milk production.

Some research indicates that the detrimental effects of heat stress on reproduction may start at a temperature-humidity index of 55 to 60. The THI is a combination of temperature and humidity that measures the degree of discomfort cows experience.

• Fans: Are your fans installed and maintained properly for maximum air movement and when temperatures are at or above 72 degrees Fahrenheit?

A temperature-humidity index of 68 is equivalent to a temperature of 72 degrees with 45 percent relative humidity. You should run your fan cooling systems continuously once the THI exceeds 68, especially covering the feed bunk, holding areas and resting areas. You should have enough fans to guarantee that there are no areas in the barn where air is not continuously flowing. A general rule of thumb is to space box-type fans no more than 10 times the diameter of the blades at a 20-degree angle downward towards the bottom of the next fan. For example, if the blade diameter is 3 inches, your fans should be no more than 30 inches apart. Fans spaced more than 10 times their diameter lose effective velocity and, as a result, cows will not be adequately cooled. Fan blades and housings should be cleaned at least yearly for improved performance.

You should have low-pressure sprinklers that wet the cows' hair coat in areas like the holding pen and feed bunk, where the floor can become wet without consequence. Your sprinklers should come on for 1 to 3 minutes every 10 to 15 minutes to coat the cow's hair and skin. Fans run continuously to allow for evaporation of the water.

• Barn Ventilation: Does your housing facility provide adequate natural ventilation and contain properly designed ridge openings or caps in the roof?

Ridge openings and open sidewalls allow for air removal from the barn. A ridge opening should be 3 inches wide for every 10 feet of building width. Ridge caps generally are not recommended, but if you use them, they should be at a height equal to 0.75 times the ridge opening. Overshot roofs should allow 3 inches for every 10 feet of building width. These roofs are less desirable because they assume that air always blows in the same direction. In addition, the roof slope should be 4/12, 4 inches of rise for every 12 inches of run. You should orient new facilities with the long axis of the barn placed east-west to minimize sun exposure inside the building during the summer months.

• Rations and Water: Do you need to make ration and water modifications?

Cows under heat stress will eat less often and consume less dry matter. To get cows to eat more, you should feed during cooler parts of the day, such as morning and evening. Mix feed twice daily to prevent or minimize heating of the feed. During heat stress, water intake increases tremendously. Make sure that your watering containers provide enough water for your herd and are cleaned daily. Watering containers should be placed throughout the barn so all cows can reach them.

In summary, we realize that the dairy business is one that requires a lot of attention to detail. If you put effort into minimizing heat stress, it will lead to improved herd health and increased milk production. To get the pay off, you must follow these key principles and put them into practice on your farm.

•Graduation

began, following an invocation from Rachel Stephens. "Today you deserve to celebrate in style. You are high school graduates at long last."

Young began the ceremony by addressing the senior class, urging them to dream big and to let their instincts, intelligence and heart guide them down the right path, and that whatever path that they choose, to make wise decisions and continue pursuing their own happiness.

Senior Tessa Pyles made the opening remarks, where she encouraged her fellow graduates to never be afraid of change.

"Let go of what feels safe," she said. "Don't hold on to the old just because you know it so well."

From there, the Adair Band performed a piece from David Holsinger under the direction of Tom Case, where they were joined by the senior band members for one final performance.

"This is hard for me," he began. "I'm the one who loves school. I'm the one who would get here early every day to spend more time with friends."

"Many of you wished school was over years ago," he continued. "But I never wished the time away. I wished for more time—time to make more memories and more friends. After tonight, we will go our separate ways. I love all of you guys, and good luck in life."

Class of 2014 Salutatorian Natalie Bertram took the podium next. Bertram's speech centered on the concept of fortitude, which she defined as courage during pain and adversity.

"We have all faced it," she explained, referring to that pain and adversity. "Failure, fear and defeat have defined us, and we have had to have fortitude during those times.

"We never lost sight of the finish line. Tonight, our graduation is the celebration of the many times we conquered our fears and failures."

After Bertram's speech, Emily Peck delivered her 2014 Valedictory address, which began with her proclaiming that she will begiving the best advice that a 19-year-old can give, and assuring—tongue-in-cheek—the audience of its legitimacy, because she had googled it to make sure.

"Live a life full of meaning. Make it matter. Make it mean something," she advised. "Don't allow yourself to settle. Find something that excites you and enamors you and make a career of it. If you're willing to put in the work to succeed, don't let anyone stop you."

"Never lose sight of what's important," she continued. "The majority of life will be filled with the other things [outside of your career work]. These last four years have been wonderful, but they shouldn't be the best of our lives. If exams and cafeteria spaghetti are the best life has to offer, God have mercy on our souls."

"We're about to embark on the rest of our lives," Peck concluded, lifting her phone and turning to snap a photo of herself and her classmates in the audience. "But first, let me take a selfie."

Kelsey Pyles performed an emotional, tear-filled rendition of Jason Aldean's "See You When I See You," and Principal Young introduced Superintendent Alan Reed, who conferred the diplomas to the nearly-200 graduates before closing remarks from Kate Durham and a Benediction from Madelyn Murrell.

"I have the best job in the house tonight," Reed said. "I get the honor of conferring your diplomas. By the authority vested in me […], it is my sincere privilege to recognize you as the 2014 graduates of Adair County High School.

But there was, and Jonathan, a standout young baseball player, began pursuing rodeo as well, traveling to places like Scottsville, where he won this year.

"He loves baseball, too," Ms. Grant explained. "But if there is a rodeo the night of a game, he's going to drop everything and go ride."

Ms. Grant says her son is shy, and that she's actually shocked he agreed to let his story be featured.

"When he was in school and they would announce that he had won over the intercom, he would get mad," she laughed. "Even when he won Rookie of the Year, he kept telling me 'No pictures, mom. No pictures.' But of course, I took a bunch anyway."

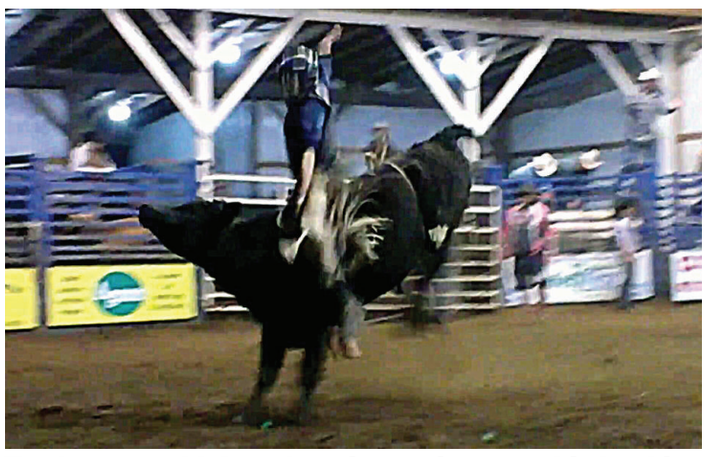

Jonathan wasn't interested in being interviewed, but his mom did speculate on why she thinks he loves the rodeo so much.

"He's incredibly competitive," she explained. "He gives 110-percent all the time in everything, and if he's playing baseball or something and sees someone not giving their all, he gets frustrated. With rodeo, it's just him and the steer.

"There are no umpires or anything else—if he falls off, it's his own fault. In baseball, if he makes an error, he feels like he let the entire team down, but riding he's only responsible to himself. He always knows what caused him to come off, too, and he works on fixing it for next time."

Even with his success, a sport like rodeo comes with its share of failures—which are often dangerous. But none of those mishaps have deterred Jonathan from pursuing his passion.

"He's broken his ribs, had a concussion, and was in a cast from his butt to his toe when he broke his leg," his mother said. "But he gets back on in a heartbeat. This is his love, and he can't wait to get back out there."

Antique Tractor Show at Homeplace June 21

The 18th Annual Russell Creek/Homeplace on Green River Antique Gas Engine and Tractor Show will again be held at Homeplace on Green River, Saturday, June 21, 2014, from 8 a.m. until 3 p.m. There is no admission fee for the family-oriented show. There will be a nominal charge for food offered by food vendors.

The show will include a variety of antique tractors on display and some will participate in contests at Homeplace and a tractor parade along the scenic Tebbs Bend Civil War trail. There will also be awards in several categories. Last year's show attracted over 40 tractors and their owners and hundreds of others interested in tractors or just out for a day of family fun.

In addition to the gas engines and tractors there will be other family activities including the pedal tractor pull for young folks that have been so popular at the show over the years. More than five miles of well-marked trails with a trail head at Homeplace will also be open.

This is the same well-known gas engine and tractor show sponsored by Garrison Construction for 16 years. Lewis Garrison moved the show to Homeplace in 2012 because of the added parking and available facilities at the historic farm.

Homeplace has no paid employees and is dependent upon volunteers and sponsors. Sponsors of the 2014 tractor show are: Thomas Graham Imp., Bank of Columbia, United Citizens Bank, First and Farmer's National Bank, Arnold's Feed and Seed, Taylor County Farm Bureau Insurance, Ken Keltner State Farm Insurance and M&W Milling.

Homeplace on Green River is located at 5807 New Columbia Road (state Highway 55) on a 200-acre historic farm 14 miles north of Columbia and five miles south of Campbellsville. First settled in 1804, the buildings and grounds at the farm are being restored as a tribute to the agricultural heritage of South Central Kentucky and a place where young and old can enjoy and learn more about our natural world.

Homeplace has been designated as "Kentucky's Outdoor Classroom," is open to the public and there are events scheduled there throughout the year. For additional information contact Ken Forman at kenforman@windstream.net or www.homeplacefarm.org.

Reliford was a member of the 99th Infantry Battalion, a special, separate battalion comprised of Norwegian-Americans and others with Norwegian ancestry. The 99th was used against the Axis powers in occupied Europe, specifically in Norway, which housed over 400,000 German soldiers at the peak of the war.

Skoglund, along with Lt. Colonel Tom Schroder of the Norwegian Army and Sergeant Therese Skalbones of the Norwegian Air Force, headed the ceremony and shared a brief history of the 99th, explaining that the battalion participated in various campaigns, being sent where needed because of their separate status and versatile nature.

During its existence, the 99th ranged from defending Malmedy, Belgium against Germany's Ardennes Offensive to serving as the Honor Guard for revered Norwegian King Haakon VII. The battalion even participated in a massive treasure and currency salvage made famous in the recently-released George Clooney film "The Monuments Men."

"I'd like to think Simpson Reliford was a part of that history as well," Captain Skoglund smiled.

In all, 52 men from the 99th Infantry Battalion lost their lives in action. Another 152 were wounded, and members of the 99th have been awarded 305 Purple Hearts and 15 Silver Stars. The battalion was first officially honored with the Norwegian World War II Participation Medal in 2011 in Washington, D.C. Of the 23 surviving members, 15 received medals that day, with subsequent medals being awarded in the three years following. Last Friday, Simpson Reliford received the final Norwegian World War II Defense Medal given to members of the 99th Battalion.

"On behalf of the Norwegian government, I am here today to officially award this medal to Simpson Reliford," Skoglund said.

In addition to the medal, Simpson was honored with a certificate for his service, two documentaries about the 99th Battalion, and a large box of Norway's most famous chocolate, named after King Haakon VII himself, whom Reliford had greeted upon the King's return to Norway following the war.

"It was a beautiful country," Reliford said of Norway. "The land was beautiful and the people were very nice."

THE ADAIR PROGRESS IN EDUCATION

John Shelley discussed the funding State Rep. Kelly Flood helped secure during the General Assembly this year. Rep. Flood toured the Adair County Youth Development Center which will receive a portion of the $1 million available over the next two years to help fund the educational needs of state agency children. Also present were Sue Buley, School Administrator at ACYDC, and Dr. Ronnie Nolan, Director of the Kentucky Educational Collaborative for State Agency Children, who will administer the funds.

Rep. Flood Visits ACYDC

BY SHAMARIE CLAIBORNE

During this year's General Assembly in Frankfort, State Rep. Kelly Flood was instrumental in securing $1 million to help ensure state agency children are provided the same education as public school children. The funds will be used to enhance educational programs across the state and will be allocated over a two-year period. Sue Buley, school administrator at the Adair Youth Development Center, which will benefit from the extra allocations, forwarded heartfelt thank you letters from her staff's students to Rep. Flood expressing their gratitude for standing up for them and trying to make a difference in their lives.

In turn, Rep. Flood honored Mrs. Buley, her staff, and the residents with a personal visit to their facility on June 2, 2014. It was truly a special day for the Adair Youth Development Center Education Dept. and students. Rep. Flood received a full tour of the facility and was impressed by the quality of education Mrs. Buley and her staff were already providing residents with their limited funding.

Joining the tour were Dr. Ronnie Nolan, director of the Kentucky Educational Collaborative for State Agency Children known as KECSAC, and Adair County Schools Title I Director, John Shelly. Dr. Nolan's office regulates state agency programs such as the Adair Youth Development Center, day treatment programs, and group homes within the state. KECSAC will be determining the distribution of the new educational funds Rep. Flood was involved in securing for these at-risk youth. In our district, John Shelly oversees how Mrs. Buley will use the new funding. Mrs. Buley had nothing but words of praise for both gentlemen and their unwavering support for her staff, students, and program.

Sue Buley has been the administrator at the Adair Youth Development Center since it opened in 2001. The Adair County School District is very proud that she has recently been named the president of the State Agency School Administrators Association for all KECSAC programs within the state.

"Any success or recognition our educational program receives can be attributed to the outstanding teachers and staff here, along with the strong support from the Adair County Board of Education," Buley says.

The Adair County Board of Education would like to thank Rep. Flood for not only helping to create a more level playing field for state agency children, but also backing up her words with positive action. By coming to meet these residents, Rep. Flood not only reinforced the staffs daily reassurances that education matters but quietly showed them that they do too.

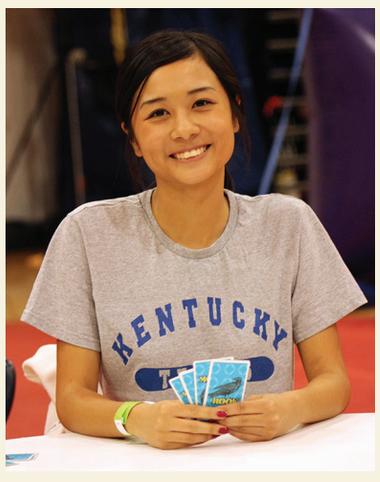

Sue Buley, Adair County Youth Development Center school administrator, John Shelley, Adair County Board of Education Title I Director, Kentucky Rep. Kelly Flood, and Dr. Ronnie Nolen, Director of the Kentucky Educational Collaborative for State Agency Children, all toured the Adair County Youth Development Center.
